Hotel Albatroz background history

With 44 rooms and 8 suites, the Hotel Albatroz Cascais has kept the architectural trace and the natural beauty of the 4 different buildings that compose it, along with the comfort of a modern and luxury hotel.

The Main Building (Duke of Loulé's Palace)

Acquired by the Albatroz group in 1982, and after an 18 month period of works of remodeling and extension of previous installations, the Palace of the Dukes of Loulé, then known as "Almond Box", was built in 1873 and was home of several families until the 60s, when it opened its doors to Tourism, with the name of Albatroz Inn. At that time, it had 11 rooms, one dining room, a bar and a nice lawn, replaced by a pool some years later.

The Palace Building (House of D. António of Lancastre)

The Albatroz Palace (across the street), was bought in the year 2000. At first named House of D. António of Lancastre (the first owner); this house was built in the XX century and keeps its architectural Italian style. Also known as "the house of the yellow ceilings", it has a beautiful balcony with arches and columns facing the sea.

The White Building

Bought in 2004 and launched in the summer of 2005, the White House was the most recent acquisition of the Group. Keeping the façade of a real beach chalet, the house was perfectly integrated with the other historical buildings. The natural solarium and the lawn were enlarged allowing even better panoramic views, especially from the suite (duplex) on the top floor of the building.
